A Publication for the Fuller Theological Seminary Community

FROM B.C. TO D.C.

*Last spring, Selena Headley
(the current SWM-GU Vice President) received an unusual invitation in the mail. . .*

It was unusual, in part, because Selena is Canadian and the invitation was for a national conference in Washington D.C., sponsored by several U.S. senators and representatives. So Selena flew off to America's capitol for the annual National Student Leadership Forum on Faith and Values in late September. She shared some of her impressions with the SEMI upon her return.

The statement of purpose for the Forum says that its intention is "to provide opportunities for college student leaders to interact with men and women in positions of leadership—in the spirit of Christ. The hope is that encouraging a deeper spiritual life and development of moral fiber will inspire young people to engage in a life of leadership and service led by God." Students from Bible colleges and secular universities (Fuller seems to be the only seminary represented) around the country gathered to discuss four topics with one another and with business and political representatives: "commitment to God, compassion to serve, character to inspire, and courage to lead." There are similar forums on the state level and in various countries around the globe.

Selena, who worked in campus ministry at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver before coming to Fuller, says that the forum "reminded me of how much I like working with college students...I could see that it was a powerful thing to have leaders stand up and talk about how important Jesus is for their strength to do what they're doing, ...and what an impact that could have on these young people." Various leaders, including Vice President Al Gore, addressed the student leaders throughout the forum. Participants were divided into small groups and they discussed the presentations, shared and prayed with one another, and participated in community service projects.

Selena's small group, facilitated by the chaplain from Westmont College, went 'gleaning in the fields' for its community project. Evidently, this is something that happens regularly in the Capitol: "Senator Tony Hall was instrumental in setting it up. They go to farmers' fields and ask if volunteers can collect left- overs and give them to the poor. They had 4,000 volunteers last year...." Selena tells us that other small groups cleaned up inner-city school campuses and visited the elderly. One amusing thing about the community service was that "Al Gore spoke to us in the morning, and we were going to go out and do our community projects, so we were all in our jeans." Gore, of course, was not dressed in jeans!

City of the Angels Film Festival

A fierce controversy has raged in our nation's capitol in the last year concerning morality and the media. Bob Dole and others have lambasted Hollywood for its perceived irresponsibility in making films filled with gratuitous violence, rampant sexuality, and filthy, disrespectful language. In such a depraved place, how can we see Jesus, or be his light?

Enter Robert Banks and a discussion group of which he is a part. Banks, Fuller President Richard Mouw, and a group of film industry professionals have been meeting for five years to discuss the intersection of faith and the media. Out of this has come the City of the Angels Film Festival. This year's festival, co-sponsored by Fuller Seminary and a group called Catholics in Media Associates, will run from October 26-29. It will showcase films that are both 'artistically vibrant and spiritually probing,' according to the mission statement for the festival. There is a conviction on the part of those involved that "spiritual perspectives are an indispensable partner in the movie-making process."

This year, the City of Angels Film Festival includes movies around the theme, "The Quest for Reconciliation in Cinema." The diversity of films chosen in itself demonstrates reconciliation: Mi Familia deals with three generations of a Latino family; I Like it Like That is a female African-American filmmaker's vision for reconciliation; The Quarrel depicts a discussion of the Holocaust by two survivors, one a rabbi; A Midnight Clear reflects an encounter between American and German soldiers. The films will be interspersed with opportunities for discussion with panels or with producers.

Dr. Banks cites popular culture as a major factor shaping our values and perceptions; he and his fellow festival organizers are seeking to redeem pop culture for God's uses. Participate in this process by coming to part or all of the film festival! Ticket prices are per session (see the brochure in your mailbox for more information on which films will show during which sessions), and there are special rates for students. Several groups from Fuller will be attending the film festival. Check in the Garth on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday between 12:00 and 1:00 for tickets or if you need transportation.

Meet the New SWM Chaplains, Rob and Delores Gallagher!

THE ASC

"Reach Out and Be Touched"

No matter why you came to Fuller, no matter how sure or unsure you are about your "calling" or career, there is someone here that can still add to your blessing; but you have to reach out and be touched. DO NOT MAKE THE SAME MISTAKES I MADE. Since November 1981, when I made the conscious decision to accept Jesus Christ as my personal Lord and Savior, I knew that I was destined for full-time ministry. I opted for Missionary Aviation even before I knew what it would take to qualify for that ministry. After my undergraduate studies, I returned to my home-country (Nigeria) to begin what I "thought" would be a fruitful ministry - only to be told I needed "more education." I came to Fuller in Fall 1993 with only one interest - to obtain the required level of education - a Ph.D.

When you are "sure of your calling" like I am, when you "know" where you are "supposed to be," the only things that interest you are ways to get back to your path, your destiny. If anyone had told me, even last Fall, that I would now be trying to encourage students to "take a breather" and become involved in any form of non-academic activity, I would have labeled the person a false prophet; because the only thing in my agenda then was ACADEMICS.

Although I was pretty sure where I was going, I felt old, lonely, frustrated, and out of place; I had too many financial obligations and the added difficulty in raising my tuition because of my inability to find a job. My social contacts from Fall 1993 to Fall 1994 were limited to just a few that I made in class. I worked full-time with twenty units every quarter except Fall 1994; technically, I had a good reason not to fellowship with others. There was nothing really wrong with my schedule except the fact that I missed out on the most important part of the community. I lived alone (most of the time) so nobody knew when I hurt and when I needed help. In principle, I was still a member of the Body of Christ, but in practice, I was a lonely, frustrated, out-of-place, old man who desperately needed to fellowship with other gems that God has placed in this community.

You may not feel the same way I did, or you may not even know you feel that way, but we are here to help you with some R and R so you won't have a chance to feel that way. On the other hand, if you are already feeling lonely or out of place, we can remedy the situation. Having missed the wonderful fellowship I would have had with God's people for two years, my goal for the for the rest of my stay here at Fuller is to help as many people as possible see and experience the blessing of fellowship and non-academic activities. Put simply, I'm going to do my best to help you have fun. I have the support of the All Seminary Council (ASC) in my pursuit; as the Events Coordinator, I am paid to organize fun activities for you.

For starters, I would like to meet as many of you as possible. Please stop by the ASC office on Wednesdays from 11:00 am to 1:00 pm and say Hi. I would like to get to know you and your needs, and am also open to fun ideas. I hope to see you soon.

This week's column is in response to a note I received following the last column. It would be helpful to many of you, I know, to have a summary of the various Bible study products available with a list of their features. While this list is quite sketchy, it will hopefully be enough to steer you in the right direction. I may do a more detailed listing on select programs at a later date. And now... THE TABLE!

MacBible is also available at the Fuller Bookstore. They may be able to order other software as well.

Explanation of the categories is as follows:

Name - I know, this is obvious. But the letter in parenthesis following the name indicates the platform on which the software runs: (M)acintosh, (D)os, or (W)indows.

Fmt - this gives the format of the installation disks, whether 3.5" diskettes (FD), CD-ROM (CD), or both (B).

ET - English translations. The number of English translations available with the software mentioned. Note that this is the total number possible, not the number which come with a base package. If the number is marked with an asterisk (*), there are also other modern language translations available. Also note that I may be working from an old or incomplete list, so there may actually be more available than noted.

Str - One of the most common helps provided with English translations is Strong's numbers and the Greek & Hebrew dictionaries linked to the numbers. A check here indicates that the software in question provides these numbers.

HP - "Helps." This is a "catch-all," including commentaries, bible dictionaries, outlines, study notes, etc.

HB - Hebrew Bible. LXX - Septuagint. GNT - Greek New Testament. Are we getting redundant?

Psg - Not all original language computer Bibles are created equal. If you want more than just the Greek & Hebrew texts, but want some help with your parsing, a check in this column is necessary. Note also that most, but not all, software which provides the parsing also allows you to search for words based on the parsing. Finally, not all software includes lexicons with the original language texts - be sure to ask before buying!

Price - Should be obvious, but a note is required. The price listed is the approximate cost for a basic software package. Virtually every product listed here has a basic configuration (often with one or two English texts, perhaps a couple of helps), to which any other features listed must be added at additional cost. Let the buyer beware.

Phone - call this number for more information or to order the given product. You may want to ask them to send you more information so that you know exactly what you are getting yourself into.

A couple of other comments are in order. Some of my information is somewhat dated: there may be a few different features, or prices may have changed, on some of these products. Further, I have not reviewed everything listed here: the inclusion of a product is not intended as an endorsement. Finally, if you have any questions or comments, please contact me at box 290 or on the Internet at mbeetley@fuller.edu. I may not respond right away, but I'll do my best. Shalom!

My Fellow Internationals: Welcome to Fuller!

We, the members of the International Student Concerns Committee (ISCC), welcome you with love to Fuller Theological Seminary. You have come to the right place! Fuller is a unique institution with a Christ-centered emphasis, where students from over eighty nations and numerous evangelical denominations come to be trained and to prepare for ministry.

The ISCC at Fuller exists to voice the issues that concern you and to address the unique challenges we face as international students in this school. It is our desire to facilitate fellowship and to build bridges between us and our American friends. In order to achieve these objectives, we want to encourage you to participate in our activities and to take initiative to get to know people on your own. This is part of your learning and training process here in the United States. Also, this may be the only chance in your lifetime to get to know so many people from all over the world: utilize it!

Each of us has brought something special to the Fuller community. It is our responsibility as visitors to this country to share some of our unique gifts and experiences with others. Most especially, we want to share with those who have not been privileged to taste the beauty of cultures outside the USA. We will be asking some of you to share the experiences you had before coming to Fuller, your expectations of Fuller and the realities you have faced.

Some of you may be going through culture shock right now. Don't be discouraged; we want you to know that it is part of the process we all go through and you are not alone. Remember the Lord who brought you here will also see you through your studies. Please get in touch with us. May God bless you.

"Our Common Life"

I play the oboe in the Pasadena City College student/community orchestra. At the rehearsal following a recent concert, our director said, "One of the nicest things is that you all seem to like each other. That's far different from many symphonies where the musicians come, play, leave, and never speak to one another. They are all bitter competitors."

I wish I could claim that we in the SOP were like the PCC orchestra. We do not always like each other and we sometimes find ourselves in bitter competition. At least these feelings have been true of me. I have vivid memories of several times in which I passed from the stress of problem solving into the distress of personal conflict over some problem I was having with a colleague.

On one occasion, I remember repeating the ritual of Holy Communion to myself and being deeply humbled over the fact that I was "not in love and charity with my neighbor" (in this case another professor). From that day, I have not allowed myself to forget that we are all Christians here at Fuller. That means a lot to me. We do not have the option to indulge our differences until we wish each other ill (i.e. call our brother or sister a fool - a person of no worth!).

I went to my colleague. We now live together as Christians in spite of our differences! I am pleased to say that is the way we do things in the SOP. I would not claim that we are fully reconciled. Reconciliation is a strong word that implies, to me, that we trust each other completely. We don't. But we are committed to one another and we live by grace. I hope our life together sets a good example of what it means to be Christians in the midst of our common life.

H. Newton Malony
Senior Professor of Psychology, SOP

Perhaps the most memorable part of Selena's experience was when she was asked to introduce a dialogue on racial reconciliation between Barbara Skinner and Rosemary Tribble. According to Selena, the dialogue "was really interesting. For Barbara, Rosemary was almost the antithesis of what she wanted to be: a white, Southern, Republican, conservative, former senator's wife, and here's Barbara Skinner, a Democrat and a black activist, but in Christ they decided they wanted to walk out reconciliation and treat each other as sisters. Basically the message to the students was to get out there in relationship with somebody from a different culture and walk it out. They talked about their journey and the struggles and challenges they had in really being sisters in Christ... I was really honored to introduce that session, because that's something that's close to my heart."

Congratulations on being invited to participate in this important forum, Selena, and thanks for representing the best of Fuller!

YOU WERE ONE TOO!

If you see a nicely-dressed, lost-looking person wandering through campus on Monday, October 23, please say Hi! Prospective students will be visiting campus that day, and we want them to feel as welcome as possible.
